(221108) PAIN CONTROL

Don Mottin, CMI, DNGH, OB

All-levels

- Discover rapidly if the pain is physical or psychological in nature
- Achieve 100% improvement with every client
- Use regression as a means to break the pain cycle
- The six traits of psychosomatic pain or illness
- Tapping into the body's immune system
- Pediatric pain control
- Phantom limb pain
- Side effects of chemotherapy

There are three requirements to be successful when working with pain control. First, the material must be written out for you. Secondly, the instructor must have the ability to deliver the material in a simple yet precise manner. Finally, you must learn by actually seeing the techniques demonstrated. Over 40 million people experience headaches. At least 15% of the population will have backaches at some time in their life. The US Health and Human Resources Department have found that we spend over fifty billion dollars each year on pain control. It would be wonderful if you could learn a single hypnotic pain control technique that would work for everyone. This is not the case. Learn the seven pain control procedures that have been proven to be a success.
